French were, however, killed by the sword, though it is true that about twenty were shot by the Chinese. The statement that between 200 and 800 Frenchmen perished "under the well-directed fire of the Chinese" is another fiction, the French loss in killed and wounded being under 60, while the Chinese had 200 men placed hors de combat. The Shen-pao, which of all the Chinese tion, gave similar figures, and its account was substantially the same, as to facts, as that given by our correspondent. It will be seen therefore how little reliance can be placed on Chinese war news. The worst of these misrepresentations is, however, that they serve to excite false hopes in the minds of the Chinese and persuade them into ben cruel deception which cannot last, but may do much mischief, as it is likely to induce more of the mob outrages, of which the antiforeign rigt at Wenchow is the most recent

We have seen one of the counterfeits and may indicate three features by which they may be newspapers gets the most reliable informationed. The space between the word "cents" and the figure I of the date 1883 is much less than in the true coin, being no greater than between the other figures: the Queen's robe is ornamented by diagonal lines instead of by a scroll pattern, and the workmanship of the rim is bad, the one we have seen being also considerably thicker in one part than in another. When held in a strong light the base metal may be easily detected. Most Europeans will probably shirk the trouble of looking for these signs, but we would remind them that their neglect to do so would be a culpable lieving that the Chinese forces are invincible, neglect of duty and an encouragement to the perpetration of the crime.
